Law enforcement supervisors, regardless of agency size, may go their entire careers without managing an officer involved shooting. Others may face one with no warning, preparation, or recent experience. When it happens, the responsibility does not go to the most experienced investigator. It goes to the supervisor who is there.

That is exactly who this course is built for.

This training is designed for supervisors and investigators from agencies large and small, including those whose only involvement may be managing a scene until specialized resources arrive, or running the entire investigation from start to finish. When the incident occurs, experience level does not matter. Preparation does.

Officer involved shooting scenes are among the most complex and emotionally charged events a supervisor will ever manage. This course prepares you to immediately establish scene control, protect officer and public safety, and manage evidence in a way that preserves investigative integrity rather than creating doubt.

Attend this course and learn how to:

- Establish and maintain control of dynamic scenes without contaminating evidence or testimony
- Make defensible decisions under pressure that align with current legal standards
- Manage resources, notifications, and documentation without losing command of the incident
- How to conduct thorough investigations of officer-involved shootings, in-custody deaths and other critical incidents involving use of force

Senior Instructor James Tacchini is an active-duty Lieutenant with the San Francisco PD, and has served as a full-time OIS investigator. He currently works in a city that is widely recognized as one of the most challenging environments to police, in a state where officer-involved shootings are evaluated under some of the most exacting and unforgiving legal standards in the country. He understands the stress, the second guessing, and the reality supervisors face, and that authenticity shows in every block of instruction.
